AUSTRIAN REINING FUTURITY & NRHA SHOW 2020 IS ON!

August 19 - 22, 2020 in Wiener Neustadt / Austria

Due to the Corona crisis, reiners all over Europe missed the big events so far. However, now the first big reining show in Austria is confirmed to happen: the Austrian Reining Futurity & NRHA Show 2020 at Helmut Schulz' beautiful facility in Wiener Neustadt. It is schedule for August 19 - 22, 2020. Due to Corona, the original purse of $80,000-added had to be reduced to $57,000-added with $48,000-added in the Futurity classes.

The Austrian Futurity is open for all 3- and 4-year-old horses. There are four levels both in the Open and in the Non Pro and all classes are NRHA approved. In the Futurity classes both 3- and 4-year-old horses can be shown either two-handed in a Snaffle Bit or Hackamore or one-handed in a Bridle. Besides the purse, the event offers eight Lawson Trophies, six Morrisons, two Morgan Trophies & sixteen Silversmith Champion Buckles, as well as sixteen Reserve Champion Buckles. Also, the show is a qualifier of the 2021 NRHA European Championship.

The enrollment is online on www.showmanager.info. The deadline is July 13, 2020. Horse can be entered after that with a late fee.

After much deliberation, the winners have been selected for the National Reining Horse Youth Association (NRHyA) 2020 Art & Photo Contest sponsored by the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum.

The novel partnership with the museum not only created new prize incentives for the winners but also allowed these young artists to get exposure in a public setting. First place in each age group and category will be on display at the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum for visitors to see during the 2020 NRHA Derby presented by Markel. Seventeen NRHyA members participated with over 30 entries.

“We were so impressed with the entries,” said Gary Carpenter, NRHA Commissioner. “They each showed considerable talent and artistic expression. We encourage you to enjoy these works of art at an iconic Oklahoma location.”

The contest judges consisted of Carpenter; Michael R. Grauer, McCasland Chair of cowboy culture/curator of cowboy collections and western art at the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum; and Steve Miller, vice president, event marketing at NRHA Corporate Partner Montana Silversmiths.

A fan favorite will be voted on through the NRHyA Facebook page starting June 13 and ending June 21 at 5 p.m. CDT. The fan-favorite will receive a gift certificate for a pair of boots from NRHA Corporate Partner Anderson Bean Boot Company.

Here are the final placings for each category and age group:

NRHA SUSPENDS 2020 WORLD TITLE RACE

In a unanimous decision, the National Reining Horse Association (NRHA) Board of Directors has suspended the 2020 NRHA World Title race.

Historically, NRHA World Titles, awarded in open, non pro, and youth divisions, are coveted recognition for horses and riders. The international race allows aged reining horses a chance in the spotlight and highlights reiners from around the globe.

However, this year, COVID-19 has led to and will continue to cause the cancellation of many events, both in the U.S. and around the world. The NRHA Board agreed that suspending the NRHA World Title Race was the only fair and equitable thing to do for the entire membership, worldwide.

“The NRHA World Champion titles have played an important part of NRHA,” said NRHA President Mike

Hancock. “The titles have been won by exceptional people and horses demonstrating dedication, persistence, and talent. We wanted to be fair and uphold the integrity of the title. The uncertainty that exists today makes this the right thing to do. We look forward to the Adequan® North American Affiliate Championships this year and an exciting race for World Championships in 2021!”

This decision comes just as NRHA is about to kick off the first major event of 2020: the NRHA Derby Presented by Markel, which runs June 13–21 at State Fair Park in Oklahoma City. NRHA is pleased to announce that reiners are so eager to return to the show pen that this year’s entries are higher than those in 2019. Follow all the action, highlighting the best 4-, 5-, 6-, and 7-year-old horses in the industry, at nrhaderby.com and by following NRHA on Facebook.

THE RUN FOR A MILLION CANCELED FOR 2020

From the producers of The Run for a Million:

The goal of THE LAST COWBOY and RUN FOR A MILLION is to celebrate and grow the sport of reining. The inaugural RUN FOR A MILLION generated an excitement that spread beyond the world of reining to all western performance horse disciplines — it could be felt at cutting events, cow horse events, and even in the world of rodeo. Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, it is not possible to produce and film THE LAST COWBOY or THE RUN FOR A MILLION in August. We have made the difficult decision to postpone the event until it can be produced with the same energy and excitement we experienced at the inaugural event.

All competitors who have qualified for the RM in the Rookie, Non Pro, and last year’s open shoot out are still qualified for the event once a date is secured. Those who have paid entry fees but not yet competed for the qualifier may either allow that entry fee to carry over or they may have their entry fee refunded and re-enter once a date and schedule is released.

THE RUN FOR A MILLION is produced by Brumley Management Group, LLC. For information regarding this event, sponsorship, vendor space, and advertising opportunities contact Brumley Management Group at brumleyevents@gmail.com

NRCHA DERBY CHAMPIONS CROWNED

The NRCHA Jack and Phoebe Cooke Memorial Derby is one of the largest and most prestigious events for 4- and 5-year-old reined cow horses. Shown two-handed in a snaffle bit or a hackamore, horses are judged in three preliminary events: rein work, herd work and cow work. Top scorers from the preliminaries advanced on to the clean-slate finals for a chance to win the coveted title of 2020 NRCHA Derby Champion and a share of the more than $330,000 in total payout.

In addition to the popular Limited Aged Event, the Derby also offers a full slate of NRCHA-approved horse show classes and several spectaculars. The crowd-pleasing $20,000 added CD Survivor Memorial Bridle Spectacular will take place the evening of Friday, June 12 at WestWorld of Scottsdale.

Dick Pieper:

THE BASICS OF REINING

By CHERYL
MAGOTEAUX

Photos by Peri Hughes

Last month, in the October '90 issue, Dick discussed how to select your reining partner and give him the correct foundation through suppling exercises. This month, we're going to take that youngster for a spin . . .

To keep the horse's body arced as an extension of the circle (right), Dick uses his outside leg several inches behind the cinch and supports the horse's nose with the inside rein (below).

Part II: The Maneuvers—Circles and Spins

ONCE the colt has the foundation skills of softness side to side and in the poll and is moving away from leg pressure (see "Part I" last month), he is ready to begin learning maneuvers. The horse is graduating to a higher level of skills and building on the basics, but the exercises he learned are not forgotten.

"We review the basics every day, in every training session," says Dick Pieper. "We never stop fine-tuning those basic skills, and they form the foundation for learning each new maneuver."

The Circle

"We start a horse working on a circle in a three-phase program," says Dick. "First, we teach him to circle in a frame or circle position with his hip pushed a little to the inside and his nose tucked a little to the inside, following the arc of the circle. Next, we teach him how to redirect from the outside rein and finally, we work on speed control in the circle."

Circling In A Frame

The first part of Dick's circle program is teaching the horse to work a circle in a particular frame—that means nose and hip slightly to the inside. Dick explains, "Start by loping the horse on a lead, for instance the left lead, loping to the left in a circle. Support the horse's nose with the inside rein, and use outside leg pressure several inches behind the cinch keep his body in a flexed position."

The amount of bend is proportional to the size of the circle . . . the horse's body should be arced as an extension of the circle. The smaller the circle, the more pronounced the arc. "The horse will try to get out of position by dropping his shoulder to the inside and moving his head to the outside. Correct this by pulling straight back on the left rein, and pushing with the right leg. ALWAYS use your leg when you use your hands."

Make the correction, hold a few strides, then release. "It is a mistake to hold a horse in position," says Dick. "Instead, let the horse make a mistake, correct him, then release him again. That way, the horse learns that he has to hold the position—he doesn't rely on the rider to do it for him."

To introduce the spin (from left to right above), Dick begins walking in a circle about 15 feet in diameter. Keeping pressure on with his outside leg, he begins decreasing the size of the circle while maintaining forward motion and body position. When the horse's front end seems to be making a larger circle than his rear, keep the forward motion, but draw him down with some pressure on his nose from the inside rein and bump with the outside leg. Let him begin to cross over in front, then release and let him walk forward out of the turn.

Some practice and polish is required at this point. "The horse can't progress any further on circle work until you can ask him to take a lead, and he'll stay in a frame with a minimum of control. In a big circle, he should be able to stay in position all the way around, maybe having to be 'fixed' one time. He's ready to go on when he can maintain that body position."

Teaching The Redirect

The second phase of circle work is learning to guide off the outside rein while maintaining the frame or circle position. "We do this by teaching redirecting," explains Dick. "In a typical training session, I might take a three-year-old and work him on circle position for a few minutes to remind him to stay where he's put. Then I might go right to teaching the redirect."

To begin, Dick will again lope the horse. "Say we're loping on the left lead. I'll let him lope off on a straight line or slightly to the left. Visually, I will pick a tree or fence post that is out in front of me and go in more or less a straight line toward it. I'll then take the right rein and move the slack out of it, moving my hand across his neck to the left, sliding the rein across his neck."

According to Dick, the object is,

When a youngster can work quietly and isn't having any problems, Dick focuses on speed control. To ask the horse to speed up, he leans forward slightly and pulls his legs back a little, "chasing" the colt two or three times around a big circle.

"when I move the slack with the outside rein, the horse should go to the left—still in frame with the hip and nose slightly to the inside (left)." If the horse doesn't redirect when asked to with the outside rein, Dick will go ahead and make him move by pulling him over with the inside rein while pushing with his outside leg. Of course, as soon as the horse responds, pressure is released. "The important thing is that he doesn't drop his shoulder or put his head to the outside. If the horse gets out of position, put him back in place, then go on.

"Remember, you're just doing a slight alteration of direction. Instead of a smooth-sided circle, envision a stop sign to get an idea of the degree of change." The change of direction is slight, but the horse learns to guide from the outside rein while keeping himself centered between the reins. "This is a good maintenance exercise, too," adds Dick. "I use it on my finished reining horses."

Speed Control

Dick usually works on speed control (speeding up and slowing down) about midway through or toward the end of the training session. He prefers waiting until the horse has been worked a while "and is not 'chargey' or having a problem with anything."

To regulate speed, Dick will lope the horse on a large circle, "then lean forward, pulling my legs back a little. My hands will be out over the horse's neck and I'll be asking him to go a little faster." This is called "chasing" a colt. "I'll chase him like that for two or three big circles with quite a bit of speed. Usually, by the time he has done three big circles he wants to slow down. If that's the case, I'll relax, sit down, drop my hand, and allow him to lope a couple of slow circles, then walk and rest." The exercise is then repeated

"Usually, by the time he has done three big circles he wants to slow down." To allow this, Dick relaxes, sits down, drops his hands, and lets the horse lope a couple of slow circles before walking and resting. He demonstrates the "slow down" position above.

going the other direction.

Dick emphasizes the need to "repeat this over and over. Once we introduce speed control, we do it about every training session until the body position of the rider becomes a cue. Eventually, every time I lean forward it means speed, and every time I sit down it means slow." When the horse is responsive to body position in the arena, take him out in the wide open spaces and do the same type exercises.

"The problem area for most people is having a horse that is always pulling so they have to hold him back all the time. That situation is created when people teach the horse to circle by holding him in position all the time—never turning loose. Even if you know the horse is going to mess up on the very next stride, let him do it; then correct it. Teach him to respond correctly instead of holding him there and doing his work for him."

"Don't walk a circle in one direction, then immediately switch to the other way . . . If you go . . . right . . . left . . . right, the horse can get confused and lose position."

means warming up first, then going over the basic exercises that the horse has already mastered and is comfortable with. Maybe 20 minutes or so into the workout, I will insert something new, but I never introduce anything new in the beginning of the training session."

For the spin, start by walking in about a 15-foot circle. Have the horse

The horse's body is moving in a circle so small that it almost appears that the front end is walking around the rear end. "If the horse wants to walk out of the position, or gets heavy or whatever, just walk him forward in a straight line for 10 to 15 feet, then go back to the little circle.

"When the horse gets to the place where his front end seems to be making a larger circle than his rear, keep the forward motion, but draw him down with some pressure on his nose with the right rein and bump him with the left leg. Let him begin to cross over in front, then release and let him walk forward out of the turn. Repeat the exercise again."

Dick cautions against changing directions too often. "Don't walk a circle in one direction, then immediately switch to the other way. I like to do it three or four times one way, then rest the horse, then go the other direction. If you go to the right, then the left, then

Making The Switch

When the horse is working well when ridden with two hands, Dick begins the transition to one hand. All the signals remain the same, but now the reins are crossed over each other while he holds them, palm down, with four fingers inside.

For the most part, work to the right is done with the reins held in the right hand and work to the left with reins in the left hand. The thumb side of the hand drags the rein over the horse's neck to cue him. If he fails to respond, the opposite side of the hand guides the horse's head to the inside.

Eventually, the transition is made to one finger between the reins, still using the separation to emphasize dragging the slack in the reins over the horse's neck.

The Spin

Like the circle, teaching the spin correctly is absolutely dependent upon the horse already having mastered the basics—being soft side to side and in the poll, and moving away from leg pressure. Well-refined basic skills are a must for learning this maneuver. The response, and the spin, has to be light, willing, and soft.

Dick explains his method of teaching this maneuver. "To introduce the spin, I start the workout like any other. That walking with his head and neck down and relaxed, nose and hip to the inside. Keep pressure on with the outside leg, pushing forward, forward, forward while drawing the circle down smaller and tighter.

"For example, to the right, you would have the horse's head slightly to the inside using your left leg to bump the horse forward, walking a medium walk. As he gets more comfortable, I draw the circle down, making it smaller and smaller, increasing the bend, bumping with the left leg."

the right, the horse can get confused and lose position.

"From that point, I duplicate this procedure over and over until I can walk the circle, draw it down, and the horse will do a 360-degree turn," continues Pieper. "Then I try to walk into the spin and out with the same stride and cadence . . . kind of a no-stop, no-start maneuver."

When the horse can do one 360-degree spin, try for two—still with no speed. If the horse loses forward motion and gets tangled up in the turn, the correction is to make him walk forward out of it, then walk back into the circle and try it again.

"When the horse gets to the point that he can do this remedial spin, I might try to just gradually walk forward in a straight line, then draw him into a turn and turn him around. Always stress walking out of the spin throughout the training period."

Many novices worry about the horse correctly planting the pivot foot. "I don't even think about that at this point," says Dick. "Some of them will and some won't plant their foot at this stage, but that's not a problem until you are starting to build a lot of speed. As long as he is doing everything else right, when you ask for speed, he'll soon find that planting the pivot foot is the easiest way to complete the maneuver."

If the horse has a problem reaching over the inside front foot with the outside front foot in the turn, help him by increasing the bend of his body. That bent position shortens his stride with the inside leg and lengthens his stride with the outside. It also results in less weight on the outside and more freedom to reach across in the front.

As the horse gains confidence, he is able to refine his spinning technique. "And as he does, you can begin to add speed to the spin," says Dick. "The only thing you do to speed up the spin is use more leg. Once the horse has learned to correctly execute the spin and do it quietly, he learns cadence and the series of steps involved. Gradually, over a period of time, I begin to bump more with my outside leg back on the horse's rib cage to speed up the spin. Sometimes a horse will get a little out of position when he speeds up. If he does, I slow down and let him get his position back, then ask him again with that extra leg pressure. Sometimes, you might also bump the horse's outside elbow with the side of your foot, then take it away, then bump again, to encourage him to keep moving in the front end."

"The most common mistake we see is that people try to increase the speed by increasing the pressure on the inside rein . . . which means 'slow down or stop' to the horse."

He continues, "The most common mistake we see is that people try to increase the speed by increasing the pressure on the inside rein. They put more pressure on the rein—that causes more pressure in the mouth, which means 'slow down or stop' to the horse, so it really gets in the way of speed. This process of adding speed is really simple—use more leg pressure—if the horse increases his speed and maintains his body and head position, fine, gradually add more. Any time the horse loses body position, decrease the leg pressure/speed until he is able to handle it.

"Actually, the horse will be in the kindergarten stage of circles, stops, spins, and rollbacks all at the same time. I wait until the circles are pretty far along before I initiate lead changes."★

Next month, in the December '90 issue, we'll look at those final maneuvers—the stops, rollbacks, and lead changes.
